Lobdell ready for major renovations

Immerman said that the Student Center "is a very attractive commercial location," pointing out that over three million people entered the Student Center last year. The main goal, Immerman said, is "to attract those vendors who are going to explicitly cater primarily to the needs of the students."

The current plan includes a convenience food store, office supply store, automatic book tellers, pharmacy, record store, newspaper, 24-hour copy center, Ticknor outlet, travel agency, and hair stylist.

The Tech Coop will begin moving out of the first floor after Easter, but plans on maintaining some kind of service at least through the end of classes, according to Coop President James A. Argeros. The new Coop branch in Kendall Square should open around May 4, he said.

Student Center addresses student needs

Immerman received student input on the new Student Center design in several ways. A client group comprised of undergraduates, graduates, and several faculty members met biweekly with Immerman to present their views. "They've been extremely helpful in qualifying our ideas," he said.

Also, about 30 campus groups presented feedback on the plan, and 801 people returned surveys on the renovations. The Student Center management also solicited feedback on meals from students in eating areas.

"What has surprised me and pleased me is the uniformity of opinion among students about what they'd like to see," Immerman said.
