Youths attack dormitory tutor

By Matthew M. Chertoff

An MIT graduate student was attacked by five or six juveniles on Amherst Street the evening of April 11. L. P., a 500 Memorial Drive dorm tutor, suffered minor cuts, but did not require medical treatment, according to Campus Police Captain James Matheson.

Pain said he was walking behind New House and 500 Memorial Drive on Amherst Ave at 10:45 pm when he noticed a group of about five or six others standing on the sidewalk. One youth stood on the right side of the group and four or five others stood on the left.

As Pains passed between the teenagers, one grabbed his legs and pulled him down. "At first I thought it was a joke," Pain said. "But the youth continued attacking and Pain resisted and fought back. At this time the other tengents joined in and Pain yelled for help. The entire group fled towards the youths to Memorial Drive.

Pain then ran back to Campus Police, but the youths had disappeared by the time the police arrived.

Pains said, "They [the teenagers] didn't say anything. Pain said. They simply assaulted and attacked him. Pain noted later that his knapsack was missing, but did not contain any valuables.

Alternative HASS-D proposal with no cap on subjects being written

A group of nine professors is working on an alternative proposal for a humanities, arts, and social science field at a forum sponsored by the Undergraduate Association on Friday.

J. L. Kerber, associate dean of engineering, and Phillip S. Kitzer, associate dean of humanities and social science, spoke in favor of the proposal at the forum, which was attended by only eight students.

The proposal would allow un-
