suit, but she still encountered sexism — and racism — questions. One male interviewer asked: "Can I touch you? What ... African American?"

Cibis recommended that students expand their interests while in college, but also keep some long-term goals in mind. She stressed that women should not compromise their goals — that they should not, for example, allow partners to hinder their careers.

Foti Prazak, the warmest memories of college revolve around the people that she met there, not from the classes that she took. Her four closest friends, she said, were people she met on the first day of school. Fifteen years later, they still support each other.

As the crowd of students was walking from East Campus to the Longfellow Bridge for the sodium drop on Memorial Drive, according to Mark Virtue '90, the arresting officers did not arrive until after the sodium drops were finished, according to Virtue.

"Most of us had assumed that the police knew about it," Fox said. He added that he had heard rumors that there were some people in the area who were playing with fireworks.

Fox said as officer told him that he had learned "a valuable lesson": that friends aren't very helpful. In response to a comment Fox made to Johnston about alcohol not being served at the police station, they said. The MDC police station clerk identified the arresting officers as Mi-
