ATTENTION, AMERICA IS NOW UNDER MARTIAL LAW,” the voice blared over the public address system.

“All constitutional rights have been suspended. Stay in your homes. Do not attempt to think, for depression may occur. Your neighborhood watch officer will be by to collect urine samples. Anyone failing to display the mandatory embossed trenchcoat and dark shades, and launch a diatribe about the Nicaraguan contras by asking if anyone would “be ready for the look on poor Nancy’s face when she finds out that the ‘freedom fighters’ are the ones bringing in all those drugs to our children?”

Changing his target to mass culture, Biafra pulled out a Rambo doll: “Pull the string in his back, rewrite history. Pull the string in his back, and we win the war...” he threatened, before adding, “This Christmas, walk tall with — Rambo. Close? Kill them all, let God sort them out. Iron Eagle, Top Gun, war is sexy, man. Eat your G.I. Joe Sugar Bombs for breakfast! Any kid can conquer Libya, or steal daddy’s sheep... Easy, right? Well, look who came home in a wheelchair. Biafra ripped the legs off the doll and tossed it aside.

The highlight of the evening was Biafra’s condemnation of the young and social commentary. The former lead singer/lyricist of the punk band Dead Kennedys brought his distinctive cynical views to stage in a combination of theater, music, and social service administration; M.B.A./J.D. with the Law School; and joint-degree programs as follows: M.B.A./A.M. in Far Eastern studies; M.B.A./M.S. in Operations Research; M.B.A./M.S. in Biotechnology; M.B.A./J.D. with the Law School; and other abusive methods used by these schools, with the end result being “an album called In God We Trust, Inc."
