ODSA investigates fight at Baker

By Darrel Tararsowicz and Thomas T. Huang

ODSA—The Dean for Student Affairs will continue to investigate a fight that occurred in the early morning hours last Saturday at Baker House, even though the students involved had not decided to press charges against each other. The fight resulted in a student being taken to a second-story window.

The Dean's Office will decide next week whether the incident should be resolved by the Dean's Office or sent to the Committee on Discipline, said James B. Tweedy, associate dean for student affairs. Tweedy, who has met with the three parties involved, said the fight may have been alcohol-related.

"If the ODSA determines that rules have been broken, appropriate punishment may be executed," Tweedy said. Opponents of the Faculty Fellows program argue that it is too faculty contact-intensive and expensive.

ODSA's student affairs program aims to improve students' interactions with faculty contact-office.

The Provost has initiated programs for five or six houses, each with five or six fellows, she said. Each fellow will have $2000 to cover expenses for activities with house residents. The ODSA has been in contact with them for several months. (Please turn to page 2)