I dred graduate students two weeks after they were interviewed were eventually headed by Barrett, consists of possible internal configurations recommendations to the architectural planning underway were instituted because an excessive amount of space exists in the dormitory. The ODSA intends to screen these potential graduate residents in a manner similar to the process used by the GSC. While there are currently about 50% of the graduate residents live on campus, ODSA is trying to make the dormitory more attractive for graduate students, and the ODSA staff has been working hard on this project. Furthermore, the area surrounding the dormitory has become the focus of the ODSA's efforts.

Grad dormitory planning underway (Continued from page 1)

A "client team" was formed two months ago to get feedback from graduate students and make recommendations to the architects, Roya, S. Solo, and Loo — on possible internal configurations of the dormitory. The team, headed by Barrett, consists of both graduate students and members of the administration. The team sent a survey to three hundred graduate students two weeks ago.

Barrett commented that the dorm could be "made pleasant." Its brick walls and the wide corridors in the center will make a nice environment. Furthermore, the area surrounding the dorm will change drastically in the next few years.

Graduate housing has been insufficient for the past five years, Barrett admitted. While only 30 percent of graduate students live on campus, over 50 percent desire to do so, according to a survey the GSC did in 1986. During the last two years, the GSC has been pressuring the administration to erect these needs, Meredith said.

The last graduate dormitory, Tang Hall, was built fifteen years ago, and Ashdown House was renovated in 1975. The need for graduate student housing has increased a lot since then, Barrett said. "Our job is to respond to the students' need. I hope this dorm is just one in a series."

Max R. Kordos
(Continued from page 1)

Nevertheless, the Suffolk County medical examiner yesterday ruled the death a suicide. He would not comment on whether high levels of aspirin were found in the body during the autopsy. Suzanne M. Wurster '89, who went to the same high school as Kordos, explained that Kordos was very smart and always demanded a lot from himself. He finished high school in three years. Then, he participated in plays, the math team, and the science club, Wurster said.

He continued his interest in theater when he joined the Musical Theater Guild in the fall of 1985. He served as secretary between the fall of 1985 and fall of 1986. Scott E. Ramsey, treasurer of MTG, said that Kordos was a very good singer and had given him and gave you several of his favorites. He said that "he knew you would like them because you had mentioned them several times.

Several weeks later, Sam attempts suicide.

How could you have intervened sooner? Or would you have just been too rusty? What signs should you have recognized? What should you tell the other students to do in the future?

It has been rumored that several female students are gay. Though no one has ever had a confrontation with these women, people are forewarned cranking jokes and making comments behind their backs. You have even been known to laugh at some of the jokes.

Would you confide to the women to let them know about the rumors? How would you react?

Recently you learned that Mary's boyfriend, a non-student, had moved into her room with her. She is very jealous, helpful out on the floor, and has pretty much become a member of the group. No one has any complaints, and you do not either. Any comments?

A white student comes to your room to discuss her concern about the only black student in the dorm. "Well, you know Matthew who lives on the second floor; it is just that he is always by himself. He studies a lot in his room and does not interact with students on his floor. He is always alone in the dorm. He is probably having as much difficulty being something emotionally or psychologically charged with him. He seems so different from the rest of us. Can you talk with him?" How do you respond?

You are making an informal visit throughout the dorm, and see a group of white students working together. The group is working on an assignment for a class they have. They use a group study technique. "We are currently working together on a group project: Arabic, Chinese, Dutch and German." How do you respond to this group?

You receive an anonymous phone call from a woman on your floor. She claims women on the floor are being forced to have sex. What do you do? How do you react?

Linguistic Systems, Inc.
11 Bishop Allen Drive
Cambridge, MA 02139

Microtech Nova 30, only $799.
Backed up by a 5 year warranty.
(Continued from page 1)

Athena: You don't know very much about this woman. It has been rumored that several female students are gay. Though no one has ever had a confrontation with these women, people are forewarned cranking jokes and making comments behind their backs. You have even been known to laugh at some of the jokes.

Would you confide to the women to let them know about the rumors? How would you react?

Recently you learned that Mary's boyfriend, a non-student, had moved into her room with her. She is very jealous, helpful out on the floor, and has pretty much become a member of the group. No one has any complaints, and you do not either. Any comments?

A white student comes to your room to discuss her concern about the only black student in the dorm. "Well, you know Matthew who lives on the second floor; it is just that he is always by himself. He studies a lot in his room and does not interact with students on his floor. He is always alone in the dorm. He is probably having as much difficulty being something emotionally or psychologically charged with him. He seems so different from the rest of us. Can you talk with him?" How do you respond?

You are making an informal visit throughout the dorm, and see a group of white students working together. The group is working on an assignment for a class they have. They use a group study technique. "We are currently working together on a group project: Arabic, Chinese, Dutch and German." How do you respond to this group?

You receive an anonymous phone call from a woman on your floor. She claims women on the floor are being forced to have sex. What do you do? How do you react?

Linguistic Systems, Inc.
11 Bishop Allen Drive
Cambridge, MA 02139

Microtech Nova 30, only $799.
Backed up by a 5 year warranty.

Athena: You don't know very much about this woman. It has been rumored that several female students are gay. Though no one has ever had a confrontation with these women, people are forewarned cranking jokes and making comments behind their backs. You have even been known to laugh at some of the jokes.

Would you confide to the women to let them know about the rumors? How would you react?

Recently you learned that Mary's boyfriend, a non-student, had moved into her room with her. She is very jealous, helpful out on the floor, and has pretty much become a member of the group. No one has any complaints, and you do not either. Any comments?

A white student comes to your room to discuss her concern about the only black student in the dorm. "Well, you know Matthew who lives on the second floor; it is just that he is always by himself. He studies a lot in his room and does not interact with students on his floor. He is always alone in the dorm. He is probably having as much difficulty being something emotionally or psychologically charged with him. He seems so different from the rest of us. Can you talk with him?" How do you respond?

You are making an informal visit throughout the dorm, and see a group of white students working together. The group is working on an assignment for a class they have. They use a group study technique. "We are currently working together on a group project: Arabic, Chinese, Dutch and German." How do you respond to this group?

You receive an anonymous phone call from a woman on your floor. She claims women on the floor are being forced to have sex. What do you do? How do you react?