Two stabbed at Lobdell

Victims not from MIT; suspects still at large

By Joey Marquez
and Andrew Lamberth

Monday night in one of the Student Center's many common areas, two students were stabbed. The suspects remain at large.

The victims were two friends, and both were students at MIT. According to MIT Police, the fight occurred around 10:30 p.m. and involved a large group of people.

As of now, the police have not released any information about the suspects or the cause of the fight. It is unclear if the fight was related to any other recent incidents on campus.

Post-doc injures intruder in hit and run incident

By Katherine Shim

A postdoctoral researcher at the Center for Cancer Research was hit by a car on Monday night. The incident occurred around 10 p.m., and the researcher was immediately taken to the hospital.

The police are still investigating the incident, and no suspects have been identified.

Grad housing policy discourages involvement

By Dave Weil

The Graduate and Professional Student Council is considering a new policy that would discourage students from participating in on-campus housing.

The council is concerned that the current policy is too permissive, and that it allows too many students to engage in potentially dangerous activities.

The new policy would require students to sign a contract that outlines their responsibilities and the consequences of violating them. It would also limit the number of times students could participate in on-campus housing activities.

ASA amends MIT poster policy to curb "pollution"

By Lauchlan Rawn and Karen Kaplan

The Association of Student Activities has amended its poster policy to include stricter guidelines for the placement and distribution of posters.

The changes were made in response to concerns from undergraduate groups that the current policy is too permissive, and that it allows too many students to engage in potentially distracting activities.

The new policy requires that all posters be approved by the ASA before being distributed, and that they be hung in designated areas.

The changes were approved by the ASA's executive board on Monday night, and will be implemented immediately.

(All text continues on page 17)