The assumption that ILGs are the only ones who commit rush violations is unfair and wrong. Perhaps the reason that The Tech is so adamant about the IFC rushing the violations is that it feels the information would make a good front-page headline. Or maybe it thinks that the story would give people something to talk about over lunch. I am sorry to inform you that the IFC will not contribute to such tabloid journalism.

Rush penalties do not need to be publicized

One thing I have noticed in my three-and-a-half years at MIT is people’s willingness to frame subjects when they only see half of the story. A striking example is The Tech’s recent edito-torial ("Publish ILG rush sancctions," Nov. 8). The Tech said that in order to prevent houses from violating rush rules in the future, the Interfraternity Council should publish the sanctions for rush violations.

If The Tech had even read its own story on the matter ("Jud-Comm rush trials start: fewer vilations reported," Oct. 25), it would have known that there are many cases which have not yet been brought to trial or are under appeal. I hardly think it would be fair to publish accusations, since definitions are supposed to be innocent until proven guilty.

The IFC rush and Judicial Committee chairmen take many steps before and during rush to minimize rush violations by keeping in touch with IFC members. I do not see the purpose of publicizing those sanctions to the whole MIT community.

The Tech also assumed that only fines are given as sanctions. The IFC is aware that fines are inadequate as long as there are no more than a slap on the wrist. JudComm often sanctions houses in ways that will have a greater impact, such as imposing restrictions on the following year’s rush.

If The Tech is so concerned with people obeying rush rules, why doesn’t it ask the same of dormitory system? I don’t know any of the statistics of dormitory rush violations, but it seems to me that holding certain dormitories or parts of dormito-dies up as examples to other dormitory residents would serve an equal purpose. The assumption that ILGs are the only ones who commit rush violations is unfair and wrong.

Perhaps the reason that The Tech is so adamant about the IFC publishing the violations is that it feels the information would make a good front-page headline. Or maybe it thinks that the story would give people something to talk about over BEHIND THE MAGIC.
