UROP Funding Does Not Meet Increasing Requests

By Eva Moy

Flooded with requests for over $1 million in research grants, Undergraduate Research Opportunities Program (UROP) had to turn away many applicants for summer research funding.

"UROP had to turn away many applicants for research funding," said Undergraduate Research Director Norma McGavern. She added that UROP had to "pass out money at one time or another," said Undergraduate Research Director Norma McGavern. She added that UROP has to reach a balance between the amount of money allo-

A student with UROP funding may receive a maximum of $3,300 for the summer, although students with full faculty sponsorship may receive more.

"Students and faculty should treat UROP as a "tertiary source of funds," not as a primary source," said Poux. "UROP helps students who have not been able to secure funding. UROP also helps to keep senior fac-

Yesley asked. "I think it's time to bring a bunch of competent people?"

"We want our money to be used when there are no other resources," said Poux, adding that there is "more pressure on UROP in depressed economic times."

UROP encourages the faculty sponsoring the research to pay as much as they possibly can, Poux said. In general, the costs of hiring a UROP student is split evenly between the faculty and UROP.

If a faculty member requires more than 100 percent UROP funding, the UROP office will negotiate a way to divide the funding between them. Poux said that he has done more negoti-

"We don't want people who are just fast to get UORPs," McGavern said.

This year's applications had been considered on a rolling basis, instead of by a deadline. Applications were accepted starting April 1, and the number of requests peaked in early May.

"We don't want people who are just fast to get UORPs," McGavern said.
