Robert Block, chief of the Professions and Intellectual Property Section of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice, which was responsible for the case, said it was hard to predict whether students would try to recover lost financial aid through lawsuits against the Institute and other Overlook schools.

"It's very difficult to tell whether they'll be any follow-on cases," Block said yesterday from Washington, D.C. "Each individual has to assess how they feel about their own circumstances before they make that decision."
