Raustein's Companion Recounts Friday's Stabbing

Companion, from Page 1

"When we turned around, I began to think there could be trouble. I was prepared to try to talk it out of the situation, but it all happened so fast," said Fredheim. "One of the guys walked up against him (Raustein) and was very mad at Yngve. He punched Yngve, and Yngve went to the ground," he added.

Fredheim noticed that McHugh had a knife. Velez walked up to Fredheim and demanded his wallet. Fredheim handed over the wallet, which contained only three dollars. Once Velez had advanced on him, Fredheim lost sight of him. Fredheim left sight of Raustein. During this time, McHugh, who carried the knife, allegedly stabbed Raustein and stole his wallet, which contained thirty dollars. "I didn't see Yngve, I didn't know that he was stabbed until after the attack," said Fredheim.

Fredheim, who has only been in the United States for about two months, had only met Raustein on a few occasions, when they discussed music and Norway. "My impression was that he was very nice; he was a very calm person. He wasn't the kind of person I could see running around and shouting and making lots of jokes," said Fredheim.

Economists Discuss Difficulties Of European Currency Unification

Currency, from Page 1

Economists discussed the difficulties of European currency unification and the amount of trade between two cities in two different countries should be comparable to the amount of trade between cities within the same country. He cited as an example Canada and the United States. In spite of the low tariffs between the two countries, far more trade occurs between any two Canadian cities than between two cities on opposite sides of the border. He added that even less trade occurs in Europe because of differences in language, culture, tastes, and attitudes. While the economists expressed apprehension about a common currency it's some European students welcomed the idea. Patrick M. Piccione '95, a student from the three assailants, according to Raustein. "As far as I know, he didn't get time to do it," said Fredheim.

We need someone who wants to help improve other people's lives. Who's anxious to build lasting friendships. To gain memories and experience that will last a lifetime. And a sense of fulfillment few jobs can match.

We need people to fill a unique job opening. Someone to spend two years in another country. To live and work in another culture. To learn a new language and acquire new skills.

We need people who want to help improve other people's lives. Who's anxious to build lasting friendships. To gain memories and experience that will last a lifetime. And a sense of fulfillment few jobs can match.

We need a Peace Corps volunteer. Interested? The first step is easy. Call 1-800-474-5550 Ext. 93.

Peace Corps.

The tough job you can love!

Wellesley College's 56th Annual Junior Show Wellesley College Alumnae Hall Sept. 25 & 26, 8:00PM $3 - MIT $5 - non-Wellesley Fri: post show party - Pomery Sat: post show party - Severance