Beware of the Speaker Van

A sophisticated scam takes place every year on Boston college campuses. The scammers drive by pedestrians and ask them if they would like to buy some speakers. These men claim they are delivering some very high quality speakers somewhere in the vicinity, and, if interested, to their boss, their vehicle was overstocked with speakers. If the boy seems interested, they start showing the potential customer various professional-looking sales advertisements concerning the speakers.

They also show you speaker ads from reputable sources such as The Boston Globe and The Want Advertisers, in which someone is selling the speakers for hundreds of dollars.

They say they will tell you these exceptional speakers for a couple hundred bucks because they need to get rid of them quickly. However, they casually add that they will only accept cash since they don't want to be hassled later about the sale.
