For 12 years, the voters have given Republican presidents the opportunity to lead this country toward the 21st Century. In most areas, these presidents have failed. The national debt has grown exponentially and growth has slowed to a crawl. One person who seems to have succeeded is Bill Clinton.

Bill Clinton for President

The economy: President Bush has presided over increased budget deficits and a declining economy; he is categorically unqualified to handle these problems and has demonstrated continued disinterest for the welfare of the American people. People deserve a commander who respects the American economy.

Education: Clinton has proposed an innovative system to deal with the skyrocketing costs of college education. Under his plan, any student may attend any private university at the government's expense, provided the student repays the loans in a payroll deduction or works for the government for several years after graduation, a civilian analog to the current Reserve Officers Training Corps system. We endorse this plan.

Homosexual rights: Clinton has promised to reverse the ban on gays in the military, its counterpart in the Senate.

Foreign policy: Bush has displayed some successes in this area, but he has also made some mistakes. We therefore conclude:

critic's view

Column on China Showed Ignorance

The quality of Tech columns sank to an all-time low with this opinion's opinion piece "Have nothing left to do? Overview Red China, Oct. 16." Hersch's article not only demonstrates his ignorance about Chinese affairs, but also managed to be insulting to Chinese as well.

Hersch's offhanded dismissal of China's one billion people as "among the most dull and ignorant people on the planet" is as disrespectful and contemptuous as that Japanese officer who characterized American soldiers as "lazy and uneducated. In fact, indicators such as literacy and school enrollment rates show China's population to be among the most well-educated of all developing nations. And although the communist government does control the media and distort the truth, the "masses of rural poor" are by no means a Cassandra Third World. Perhaps Hersch forgets that China's nationalistic government, which the United States supported militarily, financially, and diplomatically, failed to the communists because it lacked the support of the "masses of rural poor." Perhaps Hersch is unaware that international perception for decades didn't allow China to overthrow other countries' governments on a whim.

Why was this column written in the first place? Certainly not to help the President for malarial his foreign policy. I suspect that the author's only motive is to prove his plan, any student may attend any private university at the government's expense, provided the student repays the loans in a payroll deduction or works for the government for several years after graduation, a civilian analog to the current Reserve Officers Training Corps system. We endorse this plan.

Bill Clinton for President

The economy: President Bush has presided over increased budget deficits and a declining economy; he is categorically unqualified to handle these problems and has demonstrated continued disinterest for the welfare of the American people. People deserve a commander who respects the American economy.

Education: Clinton has proposed an innovative system to deal with the skyrocketing costs of college education. Under his plan, any student may attend any private university at the government's expense, provided the student repays the loans in a payroll deduction or works for the government for several years after graduation, a civilian analog to the current Reserve Officers Training Corps system. We endorse this plan.

Homosexual rights: Clinton has promised to reverse the ban on gays in the military, its counterpart in the Senate.

Foreign policy: Bush has displayed some successes in this area, but he has also made some mistakes. We therefore conclude:

critic's view

Column on China Showed Ignorance

The quality of Tech columns sank to an all-time low with this opinion's opinion piece "Have nothing left to do? Overview Red China, Oct. 16." Hersch's article not only demonstrates his ignorance about Chinese affairs, but also managed to be insulting to Chinese as well.

Hersch's offhanded dismissal of China's one billion people as "among the most dull and ignorant people on the planet" is as disrespectful and contemptuous as that Japanese officer who characterized American soldiers as "lazy and uneducated. In fact, indicators such as literacy and school enrollment rates show China's population to be among the most well-educated of all developing nations. And although the communist government does control the media and distort the truth, the "masses of rural poor" are by no means a Cassandra Third World. Perhaps Hersch forgets that China's nationalistic government, which the United States supported militarily, financially, and diplomatically, failed to the communists because it lacked the support of the "masses of rural poor." Perhaps Hersch is unaware that international perception for decades didn't allow China to overthrow other countries' governments on a whim.

Why was this column written in the first place? Certainly not to help the President for malarial his foreign policy. I suspect that the author's only motive is to prove