How Did You Survive for So Long, Mr. George the Unfathomably Lucky?

By Matthew H. Hersch

Back in the good old days, when barbarians still roamed the unspoiled European wilderness, feudal warriors oppressed the peasantry, and pillage was still socially acceptable, kings and princes had names that really made sense. No one wandered into the court of Charles the Great, or Pepis the Short, or Louis the Stammerer, or Ethelred the Unready, without knowing just what kind of man they were about to meet.

What name, then, would we give to our past leader, whose fall from grace we have watched with such care? Yes, such careful out there.

to be "on campus," only loosely skirting its frontiers "[Woman Assaulted in I have taken it upon myself, at great personal risk, to steal from the Campus

Police Map Resurfaces

By Matthew H. Hersch

Obviously, with the increase in violent crime on campus, the boundaries of this fine institution seem to be gradually shrinking, to the point where such facilities as Hayden Library are no longer within the bounds of protection afforded by the Campus Donut Patrol. This is no doubt due to some bizarre relief effect associated with the earth's rotation. Still, though, scientists, students, and the growing horde of disgruntled, tuition-paying parents are baf-flied.

The changes in security commitments are no doubt confusing to many, so

I have taken it upon myself, at great personal risk, to steal from the Campus Police situation room, the second set of campus maps that are kept in the Police situation room. The new edition of the maps, above, may be picked up from campus police stations. These maps are much fancier than the old edition and come with a certificate that attests to the official nature of these maps.

Free Fire Zone

Major On-Campus Crime

On-Campus

Dunkin Donuts

Injun Country

Major On-Campus

On-Campus

Property of the Campus Police

Do Not Steal and Legally Publish

17 • The Year in Review