Junior Dies in Fall from BU Law Library

Boston Police Say Death Was Suicide

The Boston University Law Library, where the body was found, is located on Commonwealth Avenue.

By Kathy Shih

Aero/Astro Implements

2 New Degree Programs

By Kevin Subramaniam

Auburn, New York 13021

This major revision is designed to bring students up to date on critical aerospace technology, he said.

The program, which Murman highlighted three advantages of the new bachelor of science program in addition to making the curriculum more up to date, offers more options for specialization and provides students the opportunity to study at an advanced level by taking a graduate course.

The new program will stress the three skills as part of its "implicit curriculum," according to the department’s literature. First, technical skills and knowledge, such as modeling, design, self-education, and information in the engineering sciences as well as one that

By Matthew Neislar

Meal Plan Proposal Criticized

If you know someone who spends time playing video games in the basement of the Student Center, be sure to thank them the next time you see them.

MIT students and others who frequent the Game Room provide a substantial revenue to the Student Center Committee and the game room manager.

For example, the student-run SCC organizes the weekly Strat’s Rat concerts held every Thursday night in Lowell Court. The committee also runs the annual spring concert and free midnight movies, operates the 24-Hour Coffee House, and arranges for live music on Kinetic Oval on sunny days, said Cliff B. Schmidt ’93, the SCC chairman and game room manager.

The Student Center Committee does not receive funds from the institution’s operating budget, but relies on the quarters of video game addicts to fund its programs. Last year, SCC spent about $7,500 to book concerts, said Dempsey. Some of these concerts attract an average price of $15,000 each year.

In 1991, SCC spent about $7,500 to book a popular concert series, according to Dempsey. Some of these concerts attract an average price of $15,000 each year.

The prices charged there are not high, however. Bromberg, who added he would not be very inconvenienced himself by the plan, said he had a meeting in the house, and one of the major points was that if ARA decides to put this plan in effect, and if we don’t eat there, ARA will just make the profit.

The survey included a description of the proposed house dining system, according to Dempsey, and it point-to-point survey of the average price of a meal and an estimate of the average price of a meal per year under the proposed house dining plan were also cited.

In the survey, 124 respondents answered "yes" to this question. "Do you approve of the house dining plan right now as written?" Only two people responded "no" to this question.

When asked, "If this plan were put into effect, would you consider moving out of the dorm?" respondents answered "yes" and "no.

"But how many would actually move out (once this plan is implemented) is a different question," said Dempsey.