Cameron Will Lead Next Shuttle Mission

brought a plastic fragment from the wing of Daedalus, MIT's human-powered aircraft that flew 72 miles from Crete to Santorini. The April 3 mission will be Cameron's second flight, according to NASA.

On next month's nine-day mission, Cameron and his colleagues "will conduct atmospheric and solar studies in order to better understand the effect of solar activity on the Earth's climate and environment," according to a NASA memo. The flight has already been postponed three times, Hernandez said.

Another MIT graduate, Janice Voss PhD '87, will fly as a mission specialist on the crew of STS-57, scheduled for launch in mid-1993, according to a NASA document.

As of September 1992, 20 MIT graduates have visited space as astronauts or payload specialists, according to Amanda Siegfried of Purdue University. At that time, MIT and Purdue were tied in second place for number of graduates in space donated by the U.S. Naval Academy.
