doesn't last long however, as a few twits bring them out suddenly into the open. The color of the flowers is a silvery, grey, and the Jacks whiskers are soft to the touch.

Shortly after the entire group has assembled outside, the scouts report back to the leader and the scouts are to start their next activity. This time they head back to the roof.

This high point provides a drama, a sense of accomplishment, and a perfect opportunity to cool off after the heat of the basement. As the activity ends, the scouts start to wander over the Student Center and the nearby Center for Creative Industries, the Jacks answer questions.

According to one student enrolled in last fall, ESF provides "a personalized teaching environment that was adjusted to my pace — and instructors that worked with me in the direction that interested me."

ESF courses are not even limited by the standardized semester format of classes, as ambitious students can finish a course before the end of the term while others can take more time to finish a course without penalty. "You can work at MIT twice before, but has reportedly been more difficult and helpful," said one student. "It has been for the tradition of the Institute of East Campus to become Jack Florye’s or Athena’s club or group members, where we can start a conversation and help others."

A few of the less hardy freshmen fell asleep, lulled by the soft breeze and distinctly breaking dawn. The group slowly thin out, and by 5:30 a.m. the figures have been passed to the next generation of students. This year, Jack Florye's club will return next year with a new name, Jack Florye.

About the author: Jack Florye is a member of the student body and is a regular contributor on the MIT campus, where he meets with other students. After a brief introduction, he tells a story of one of the most knowledgeable Jacks about his life and his friends. He tells of stories of the most spectacular bucks that have taken place on campus, and his friends. He also tells the story of the Legend of the ESG.
