required in the laboratory, but the research group’s safety office was not available for comment.

The cost of the hazardous materials cleanup will be divided between the Institute and the city. “The law requires that the property owner assume the cost of the materials,” said Raymond M. Diffler Jr., associate director of the property office. “The city will be sending us a bill.”

The cost of the labor will be paid by the fire department, Diffler said. “Fire department is not in a position to do this. This is a bill.”
