Supreme Court Will Make Tapes
Of Arguments Available to Public

The Supreme Court, in a surprising change of heart, announced Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.

The individual tapes still will not be available until several months after their recording. The Supreme Court, in a surprising change of heart, announced Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.

EPA Proposes New Regulations For Reducing Water, Air Pollutants

The Environmental Protection Agency Monday proposed tougher new regulations for reducing the level of air and water pollutants — including acid rain — emitted by mills nationwide, said that enforcing the rules would cost a loss of a maximum of 10,700 jobs.

The letter from Alfred Wong, the court’s marshal, to Trudy Peters, Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.

The individual tapes still will not be available until several months after their recording. The Supreme Court, in a surprising change of heart, announced Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.

First Lady Launches Attack On Health Insurance Industry

By Donna Bustin
WASHINGTON

In her most scathing attack on health insurers since the health debate began, first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton castigated the insurance industry Monday, charging it has caused health-care costs to spiral out of control.

"They know there's a problem. They know there's a problem." But they are "very threatened," she said to sustain their "ludicrous argument," which consumers would buy insurance that is "just a public relations cover for services that are covered now.

The Senate, facing an unprecen-ded confrontation with one of its own, was divided Monday with whether to go to court to force Republican Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon to release pages of personal diaries as part of a legal confrontation over his claim that the diaries represent his personal privacy. The letter from Alfred Wong, the court’s marshal, to Trudy Peters, Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.

The individual tapes still will not be available until several months after their recording. The Supreme Court, in a surprising change of heart, announced Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.

First Lady Launches Attack On Health Insurance Industry

By Donna Bustin
WASHINGTON

In her most scathing attack on health insurers since the health debate began, first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton castigated the insurance industry Monday, charging it has caused health-care costs to spiral out of control.

"They know there's a problem. They know there's a problem." But they are "very threatened," she said to sustain their "ludicrous argument," which consumers would buy insurance that is "just a public relations cover for services that are covered now.

The Senate, facing an unprecen-ded confrontation with one of its own, was divided Monday with whether to go to court to force Republican Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon to release pages of personal diaries as part of a legal confrontation over his claim that the diaries represent his personal privacy. The letter from Alfred Wong, the court’s marshal, to Trudy Peters, Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.

The individual tapes still will not be available until several months after their recording. The Supreme Court, in a surprising change of heart, announced Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.

First Lady Launches Attack On Health Insurance Industry

By Donna Bustin
WASHINGTON

In her most scathing attack on health insurers since the health debate began, first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton castigated the insurance industry Monday, charging it has caused health-care costs to spiral out of control.

"They know there's a problem. They know there's a problem." But they are "very threatened," she said to sustain their "ludicrous argument," which consumers would buy insurance that is "just a public relations cover for services that are covered now.

The Senate, facing an unprecen-ded confrontation with one of its own, was divided Monday with whether to go to court to force Republican Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon to release pages of personal diaries as part of a legal confrontation over his claim that the diaries represent his personal privacy. The letter from Alfred Wong, the court’s marshal, to Trudy Peters, Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.

The individual tapes still will not be available until several months after their recording. The Supreme Court, in a surprising change of heart, announced Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.

First Lady Launches Attack On Health Insurance Industry

By Donna Bustin
WASHINGTON

In her most scathing attack on health insurers since the health debate began, first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton castigated the insurance industry Monday, charging it has caused health-care costs to spiral out of control.

"They know there's a problem. They know there's a problem." But they are "very threatened," she said to sustain their "ludicrous argument," which consumers would buy insurance that is "just a public relations cover for services that are covered now.

The Senate, facing an unprecen-ded confrontation with one of its own, was divided Monday with whether to go to court to force Republican Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon to release pages of personal diaries as part of a legal confrontation over his claim that the diaries represent his personal privacy. The letter from Alfred Wong, the court’s marshal, to Trudy Peters, Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.

The individual tapes still will not be available until several months after their recording. The Supreme Court, in a surprising change of heart, announced Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.

First Lady Launches Attack On Health Insurance Industry

By Donna Bustin
WASHINGTON

In her most scathing attack on health insurers since the health debate began, first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton castigated the insurance industry Monday, charging it has caused health-care costs to spiral out of control.

"They know there's a problem. They know there's a problem." But they are "very threatened," she said to sustain their "ludicrous argument," which consumers would buy insurance that is "just a public relations cover for services that are covered now.

The Senate, facing an unprecen-ded confrontation with one of its own, was divided Monday with whether to go to court to force Republican Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon to release pages of personal diaries as part of a legal confrontation over his claim that the diaries represent his personal privacy. The letter from Alfred Wong, the court’s marshal, to Trudy Peters, Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.

The individual tapes still will not be available until several months after their recording. The Supreme Court, in a surprising change of heart, announced Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.

First Lady Launches Attack On Health Insurance Industry

By Donna Bustin
WASHINGTON

In her most scathing attack on health insurers since the health debate began, first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton castigated the insurance industry Monday, charging it has caused health-care costs to spiral out of control.

"They know there's a problem. They know there's a problem." But they are "very threatened," she said to sustain their "ludicrous argument," which consumers would buy insurance that is "just a public relations cover for services that are covered now.

The Senate, facing an unprecen-ded confrontation with one of its own, was divided Monday with whether to go to court to force Republican Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon to release pages of personal diaries as part of a legal confrontation over his claim that the diaries represent his personal privacy. The letter from Alfred Wong, the court’s marshal, to Trudy Peters, Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.

The individual tapes still will not be available until several months after their recording. The Supreme Court, in a surprising change of heart, announced Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.

First Lady Launches Attack On Health Insurance Industry

By Donna Bustin
WASHINGTON

In her most scathing attack on health insurers since the health debate began, first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton castigated the insurance industry Monday, charging it has caused health-care costs to spiral out of control.

"They know there's a problem. They know there's a problem." But they are "very threatened," she said to sustain their "ludicrous argument," which consumers would buy insurance that is "just a public relations cover for services that are covered now.

The Senate, facing an unprecen-ded confrontation with one of its own, was divided Monday with whether to go to court to force Republican Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon to release pages of personal diaries as part of a legal confrontation over his claim that the diaries represent his personal privacy. The letter from Alfred Wong, the court’s marshal, to Trudy Peters, Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.

The individual tapes still will not be available until several months after their recording. The Supreme Court, in a surprising change of heart, announced Monday that audio tapes of courtroom arguments will be available to the public for the first time in its history. The decision is a direct response to a petition by the National Archives, which had been seeking the tapes for decades.