Winners of the UA Executive Committee meeting, Chitaley charged that Kessler's actions were illegal and that he should be removed from his office.

"I think [Kessler's] actions were despicable, duplicitous, and duplicitous," said Chitaley after the meeting. Chitaley argued that the Bush Fund is governed by the same rules that govern student association finance.

Students Discuss Safety Patrol

By Lawrence K. Chung

The formation of a student escort and patrol service got underway on Tuesday when the Graduate Student Council and the Undergraduate Association held a organizational meeting. About 20 to 30 people attended the meeting in the GSC Lounge at Walker Memorial.

GSC and UA student leaders presented their vision of the student escort and patrol service to students and administrators, and solicited student interest in forming a committee to oversee the development of the program.

Chief of Campus Police Anne P. Glavin expressed her support for the implementation of the program, and discussed the role of the Campus Police in its relationship with the GSC and UA.

"If the program did nothing more than to make people feel better... that's extremely important," Glavin said. "People should be able to focus 100 percent on why they are here, their education, and their future... that's extremely important," Glavin said. "People should be able to focus 100 percent on why they are here, their education, and their future."

A brief discussion followed the meeting to raise student concerns and opinions, and the next meeting date was set to begin the drafting of the specific details of the program.

GSC details student escort plan

Jonathan D. Baker, G-co-chair of the GSC Housing and Community Affairs Committee, provided a general introduction of the student escort and patrol service.

He said that the service would provide escorts for students to walk alone in the student escort and patrol service to students and administrators, and solicited student interest in forming a committee to oversee the development of the program.
