The rules focus on maintaining communication with rushers at all times, allowing equal access by all ILGs, and providing safety to the new students. They also provide guidelines for registration, visits to trips, and other rush transactions, and defines the role of Clearinghouse, the system which tracks rushers.

“We have a lot of rules,” Hijirida said. “It seems kind of picky, but they are there for a reason. Because of that you’re almost always going to find rush violations,” he said.

Charges are based on the findings of IFC-appointed investigators, who pursue complaints made by fraternities and rushers. The hearings were conducted over a 2-day period in late September. Final decisions were made by a review board composed of one elected representative from each fraternity and living group.

All fines are deposited in the IFC treasury to be used for funding projects. These have included hosting speakers and funding Greek Week.
