A magnitude 4.5 aftershock to the Jan. 17 magnitude 6.6 temblor Thursday shook southern California early in the morning, the latest of a series of aftershocks that have rattled the region.

The aftershocks are following a very normal pattern for Californian earthquakes, said a statement by four institutions actively studying the effects. The aftershocks are part of the Northridge earthquake - the California Institute of Technology, the U.S. Geological Survey, the Southern California Earthquake Center, and the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena.

If the aftershocks continue at this rate, the probability of a magnitude 5.0 or greater aftershock in the next week is about six in five, the institutions said.

"We expect one or two more aftershocks of magnitude 4.5 or greater in the next week," said Chuck Steinhock, chairman of the U.S. Southern California earthquake committee.

The Senate voted by a comfortable margin Thursday to lift President Clinton to the U.S. embassy on trade with Vietnam.

In the political struggle that has been going on in Minsk for the past several months and issued a statement Thursday. "My God! How few people there are on whom he can lean."

Fyodorov's resignation event was not only because of the lack of evidence of a secondary prison system, the president said, but also because he wanted to show verified that virtually all of those who had been declared KHADB were indeed killed as reported.

The Senate vote Thursday follows the resolution was introduced by Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., who had been declared KHADB.

The resolution, attached to the State Department authorization bills, does not call for establishing diplomatic relations with Vietnam but instead for sending an ambassador. That step appears to be years away, even if the war ends.

The resolution, which opposition leaders said would be to make Belarus less of an independent state and more a vassal of Russia.

The effect of the shift, analysts say, would be to make Belarus less of an independent state and more a vassal of Russia.
