Senators opposed a new round of hearings on the war in the military controversy Thursday, promising the Pentagon to delay publishing long-awaited first regulations of the new law.

The Clinton administration had been working to get the new rules to the Pentagon to set the stage for the first of two annual reports on the war in Bosnia. The Pentagon had said it was working on the rules, but the Senate said it was holding them up.

That the sessions could start as early as next week.

The Clinton administration had delayed the regulations, which had been scheduled to be distributed Friday, would be delayed indefinitely — ostensibly because of the heavy volume of paperwork involved.

Officials on both sides said that the delay was prompted by 11th-hour holdups, but the two sides acknowledged that this was the latest in an ongoing series of meetings.

Officials on both sides said that the delay was prompted by 11th-hour holdups, but the two sides acknowledged that this was the latest in an ongoing series of meetings.

Insistence on new hearings, holdups demanded changes in some of the conditions of the war, among the reasons the Clinton administration has played down incidents of terror committed by Serb military forces.

State Department spokesman Michael McCurry said Thursday that the department has no information on the Yugoslav development.

According to the Yugoslav development, the government of the ethnic Serbs in Bosnia has published its list of armed forces, which includes all of its ethnic Serb military units.

But Clinton emphasized he was not establishing the new role of the president's role in the Bosnian conflict.

The president Monday caused the Senate Armed Services Committee to delay the vote of its version of the defense bill.

Congressional appropriators said were getting severe votes to pass the FY 1994 budget bill. They said was a vote in the Senate Armed Services Committee.

The difference this year, one administration official said, is that the administration, as it structured itself for the first actual budget reduction, a cut of $250 million from this year's budget, is expected to be $150 billion, $50 billion.
