Spy vs. Spy: How Government Built Its Case Against Ames

By Gaylord Shaw
WASHINGTON

On a balmy evening last September, touring Russia's new space station Mir, the Berlin Wall and the Soviet Union's collapse over the past year, President Boris N. Yeltsin vowed to end "unilateral" actions to protect ethnic minorities and to use Russian military" to quell ethnic conflicts on its own soil." The main goal of our foreign policy is consistent promotion of democracy and human rights."

Yeltsin also called the decision, which he described as "the key problem," to use Russian military to quell ethnic conflicts on its own soil.

"The main goal of our foreign policy is consistent promotion of democracy and human rights."

Yeltsin also vowed to end "unilateral" actions to protect ethnic minorities and to use Russian military to quell ethnic conflicts on its own soil.

"The main goal of our foreign policy is consistent promotion of democracy and human rights."

Yeltsin also vowed to end "unilateral" actions to protect ethnic minorities and to use Russian military to quell ethnic conflicts on its own soil.

"The main goal of our foreign policy is consistent promotion of democracy and human rights."

Yeltsin also vowed to end "unilateral" actions to protect ethnic minorities and to use Russian military to quell ethnic conflicts on its own soil.

"The main goal of our foreign policy is consistent promotion of democracy and human rights."

Yeltsin also vowed to end "unilateral" actions to protect ethnic minorities and to use Russian military to quell ethnic conflicts on its own soil.

"The main goal of our foreign policy is consistent promotion of democracy and human rights."

Yeltsin also vowed to end "unilateral" actions to protect ethnic minorities and to use Russian military to quell ethnic conflicts on its own soil.

"The main goal of our foreign policy is consistent promotion of democracy and human rights."

Yeltsin also vowed to end "unilateral" actions to protect ethnic minorities and to use Russian military to quell ethnic conflicts on its own soil.

"The main goal of our foreign policy is consistent promotion of democracy and human rights."

Yeltsin also vowed to end "unilateral" actions to protect ethnic minorities and to use Russian military to quell ethnic conflicts on its own soil.

"The main goal of our foreign policy is consistent promotion of democracy and human rights."

Yeltsin also vowed to end "unilateral" actions to protect ethnic minorities and to use Russian military to quell ethnic conflicts on its own soil.