Rosenschein has been criticized by some for not being aggressive enough in seeking inspections, which requires signatory countries to agree to inspections. In the case of North Korea, the United Nations has repeatedly stated it will not send ground troops to Bosnia unless there is a peace agreement negotiated and endorsed by all three warring factions - Bosnian Muslims, Serbs and Croats. Critics have accused the American position as "not very courageous."

"They are based on the premise," she said, that the nuclear inspections will "fully implemented" and that South and North Korea will agree to exchange "special envoy" to raise the level of their political talks. Both sides are expected to continue the discussion on the terms of the inspection, including the number of inspections and the scope of the inspection.

The US and South Korean officials said they will be prepared to discuss the terms of the inspections, including the site of the inspections, the number of inspections, and the scope of the inspections.
