The court rules parole can be exempt from copyright law.

President Clinton is trying to persuade Lloyd N. Cutler to serve as White House counsel, according to a well-known Washington figure who held the same job in the Carter administration. The person said that Cutler expressed approval over the weekend that they were searching for a "Lloyd Cutler" type, and Monday tried to make that wish become reality. Sources said late Monday that Cutler and White House officials were working out the terms of his appointment.

If they reach an agreement, a formal announcement could be made as early as Tuesday. But even if Cutler, 70, does agree to undertake the administration, the effort to recruit him underscores the sense that the problems White House officials have created for themselves in their handling of the Whitewater affair.

Among the issues being discussed was Cutler's insistence that he be regarded as counsel to the Office of the President and not Clinton. If the negotiations are successful, Cutler would replace Bernard N. distribution in the American落到实处, a result of the self-imposed work that will be done by the new policy to protect the White House from lawsuits.

One of the best-known members of the Washington legal community and a veteran of deals "with the post-Cold War atmosphere," Cutler's arrival would mark the second time that Clinton has turned to a prominent Washington insider to help him out of trouble. Last year, resting over a series of sensitive legal difficulties, Clinton recruited David Gergen, a former aide, to the Clinton White House, as a senior advisor.

Clinton, at a conference newsmen with the legal team in an environment on self-imposed work that will be done by the new policy to protect the White House from lawsuits. "We were in the process of trying to get out of the national spotlight brought his connections with the Hill and the Washington establishments," Clinton's chief of staff, said, "because I'm the president's press." "He was a real help."

Bush officials are expected to say that when the defense secretary is appointed Industry Minister Yair Tsaban recommended last week that American Jewish active in Kahane Chai, Kach and the Jewish Defense League be barred from entry.

In a swiftly negotiated deal that would dramatically accelerate the consolidation in the aerospace industry, Martin Marietta Corp. said Monday it will pay $1.8 billion for Grumman Corp., a Long Island, N.Y., aircraft builder. Under the terms of the deal, Martin Marietta will take over the post-Cold War aerospace business.

The acquisition would elevate Martin to the top rungs of the U.S. defense industry, with $13 billion in annual sales, bringing it at least with well-known better rivals, McDonnell Douglas Corp. and Lockheed Martin.

"What we have here is a combination that will allow us to become a formidable competitor in increas- ingly difficult times," Martin Chairman Norman Augustine said Monday. "We have a team made up of all gold medallions.

The deal marks the latest chapter of an industry consolidation that is freezing out most of the smaller defense suppliers that will dominate the global defense market and exert more political clout. The process, driven by plants and bases, and that will be eliminated around the country, is meant to warn off potential competitors to the large aerospace industry.

Martin has increased its clout, Grumman has seen its for- mer owner, the premier, take over control of the company. The company’s policies have been to reduce its reliance on large, long-term contracts and to increase its focus on smaller, more flexible contracts. Martin has seen its reputation improve, and it has made significant investments in new technology and facilities. The company’s stock has increased by more than 50% in the past year, and it has announced plans to expand into new markets, such as autonomous vehicles and space exploration.

The Washington-based company, which has a long history of involvement in defense and aerospace projects, has been involved in a number of high-profile cases in recent years, including the development of military aircraft and satellites.

Martin Marietta was acquired by Lockheed Martin in 2006, and the new company has continued to be a major player in the aerospace industry, with a focus on developing advanced technologies and products. The company has been involved in a number of high-profile programs, including the development of space launch vehicles and satellites, and it has been a key player in the development of new technologies for defense and commercial applications.

Martin has also been involved in a number of legal battles in recent years, including a lawsuit filed by the U.S. government in 2017 accusing the company of violating federal procurement laws. The company settled the lawsuit for $13.5 million in 2019, and it has continued to be involved in legal disputes related to its defense contracts.

Martin Marietta, headquartered in Baltimore, Maryland, has been a leader in the defense industry for more than 75 years, with a presence in a wide range of areas, including space and missile defense, surveillance, and intelligence.

The company has a long history of involvement in military contracts, and it has been a major supplier of weapons systems and other advanced technologies to the U.S. military and other countries around the world. Martin Marietta has been involved in a number of high-profile defense projects, including the development of the advanced cruise missile and the advanced medium-lift transport aircraft.

Martin Marietta was acquired by Lockheed Martin in 2006, and the new company has continued to be a major player in the aerospace industry, with a focus on developing advanced technologies and products. The company has been involved in a number of high-profile programs, including the development of space launch vehicles and satellites, and it has been a key player in the development of new technologies for defense and commercial applications.

Martin also has a strong presence in the commercial aviation industry, with a focus on developing advanced technologies for commercial aircraft and airports. The company has been involved in a number of high-profile projects, including the development of the advanced regional jet and the advanced regional transport aircraft.

Martin Marietta was founded in 1942 as a defense contractor, and it has since grown into a major player in the aerospace and defense industries. The company has a long history of involvement in defense contracts, and it has been a major supplier of weapons systems and other advanced technologies to the U.S. military and other countries around the world. Martin Marietta has been involved in a number of high-profile defense projects, including the development of the advanced cruise missile and the advanced medium-lift transport aircraft.

Martin Marietta was acquired by Lockheed Martin in 2006, and the new company has continued to be a major player in the aerospace industry, with a focus on developing advanced technologies and products. The company has been involved in a number of high-profile programs, including the development of space launch vehicles and satellites, and it has been a key player in the development of new technologies for defense and commercial applications.