Sankaran, Muh Elected to Top UA Positions

By Jeremy Hylton

The newly elected candidates take office at the last UA Council meeting of the semester.

Homophobia Talk, Discussion Opens Line of Communication

By Daniel C. Stevenson

Homophobia is the result of "a fear of something you don't understand. If you can get to understand it you're not afraid of it, and it's not a problem."

Grad Students Need Dorm Net, GSC Says

By Aaron Belenky

In a resolution passed unanimously last week, the Graduate Student Council asked the Institute to install network connections in grad student residences.

Graduate students were given free connection to the MIT campus network earlier this year via Resnet, but graduate students were not. By Richard H. Doshi '95. "Once you start to communicate, you can start to eliminate some of the stereotypes and some of the false notions."

Tonight: Clearing, cold, 20°F (-7°C)

Friday, March 11, 1994

The class of 1996 Ring Unveiled

Class of 1996 ring premiere held in Walker Memorial on Tuesday night following a talk by author and gay activist Warner J. Blumenfeld about homophobia, which was "the kind of communication that is needed to make any progress on the issue," said Interfraternity Council Vice President Brian D. Dye '96.

Blumenfeld, who entitled Homophobia: How We All Pay the Price, was sponsored by Gays, Lesbians, Bisexuals, Transsexuals, and Friends at MIT, the IFC, and Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity.

The talk was "a step in the right direction," said GAMIT general coordinator Kristen K. Nummerdor G, "Progress was made simply because we liked the idea of looking down on people who were afraid to bring up were probably feeling for a while now."

"I feel generally people aren't answered the opportunity to discuss issues of homophobia and sexual orientation," Blumenfeld said, but "MIT provided a forum for people to discuss the issue."

"For the first time, it wasn't just runners or runners passing back and forth, it was people from both communities sitting down together," said IFC President Prashant B. Doshi '95. "Once you start to communicate, you can start to eliminate some of the stereotypes and some of the false notions."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years," Shrivistava said.

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years," Shrivistava said. "I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they haven't in previous years."

"I think people didn't care too much one way or another about which candidates won as much as they have..."