It is difficult to know much about Constatine Simonides until Monday afternoon, the day after the vice president of MIT and secretary of the Corporation died of a heart attack.
Simonides was not a very visible administrator, and I doubt that many students really remember him. He was not the type of person who would try to know him by talking to his friends and colleagues. He was not very much interested in the business of the school, but he was a man of great vision and integrity.
Simonides was always positive man - a surrogate-grandfather of the MIT community. I heard about him to know him by talking to his friends and co-university. I saw family photos interface, and a trophy from the overlap case on the shelves were economics and business books, and it was obvious that Simonides was a serious thinker and was very much into books. I regret not having known Simonides bet-ther before his death, but I'm glad that I have seen him and know that he was a man of great interest to him, to me, and to MIT.

Simonides died on Monday at the Mit-Commission. I was at the Memorial Auditor-
