Overcame a 6-5 deficit to go into yet another tiebreaker. He had the early edge in the tiebreaker, and won, 9-7.

Lanyon and Wang slowly worked their way back, and broke back to establish a 5-4 lead and a chance to win the first set. They would be rewarded, though, as the Williams pair battled back to Lanyon’s serve, and take the next two games to win, 7-5.

As the second set progressed, night began to fall and lights went on. The lighting was less than ideal which, combined with the wind, gave difficulty to all four players, especially in quick exchanges.

The second set was much like the first for the MIT pair. They were fast to be broken and came back, but quickly turned it.

Both had quick matches, but with very different results.

Weintraub faced Kenny Leng of Amherst College, the only one of the three-day event.
