Gingrich Speeches Give Lobbyists A Strategy for Midterm Elections
By Ann Devroy and Charles R. Babcock

The United States Senate Foreign Relations Committee is launching a wide-ranging, multiyear campaign to encourage investors to buy into mutual funds and to discourage them from making deals with mutual fund managers. The committee is hoping to raise awareness of the benefits of investing in mutual funds and to build support for legislation that would require mutual fund managers to disclose the terms of their contracts with clients.

The committee is also hoping to use the campaign to promote the benefits of investing in mutual funds. It is planning to hold a series of hearings on the benefits of investing in mutual funds and to distribute educational materials to investors. The committee is also hoping to use the campaign to build political support for legislation that would require mutual fund managers to disclose the terms of their contracts with clients.

Gingrich says that the committee is planning to use the campaign to build political support for legislation that would require mutual fund managers to disclose the terms of their contracts with clients. The committee is also hoping to use the campaign to build support for legislation that would require mutual fund managers to disclose the terms of their contracts with clients. The committee is also hoping to use the campaign to build support for legislation that would require mutual fund managers to disclose the terms of their contracts with clients.

Gingrich says that the committee is planning to use the campaign to build political support for legislation that would require mutual fund managers to disclose the terms of their contracts with clients. The committee is also hoping to use the campaign to build support for legislation that would require mutual fund managers to disclose the terms of their contracts with clients. The committee is also hoping to use the campaign to build support for legislation that would require mutual fund managers to disclose the terms of their contracts with clients.

Gingrich says that the committee is planning to use the campaign to build political support for legislation that would require mutual fund managers to disclose the terms of their contracts with clients. The committee is also hoping to use the campaign to build support for legislation that would require mutual fund managers to disclose the terms of their contracts with clients. The committee is also hoping to use the campaign to build support for legislation that would require mutual fund managers to disclose the terms of their contracts with clients.