Housing Proposal Not an Insensible Idea

Column by Michael K. Chung

The Tech's housing policy has been a subject of much debate and discussion. The proposal to move Senior House and East Campus residents to Ashdown dormitories has sparked a number of reactions from students and faculty alike. The proposal suggests that the move would be made to accommodate the growing student population of East Campus. Some students have expressed concern about the potential disruption caused by the move, while others have welcomed the prospect of living in a more modern, renovated dormitory. The proposal has raised questions about how the administration will handle the transition and whether the new dormitories will meet the needs of the residents. The debate continues as the plan moves forward, with students and faculty alike weighing in on the pros and cons of the proposal.
