TO THE EDITORS OF THE TECH:

I have for some years been interested in play-going, and nothing has been to me more interesting than to talk over with the Tech man, by whose side I might happen to stand, the charm of this actress the fun of that actor, or the meaning of the piece. Plays have a particular appeal to us, here at the Institute, they present in a short evening, in an especially lively way, the effect it would take hours of reading in a novel to produce; and no comments could be more pungent, no appreciation more quick, no discussion more lively, than those a good play arouses in a Tech crowd. So I have had for some time a pet hope that fellows might care occasionally to get together to talk over good plays current or to come and thus to keep one another informed of really capital shows. For the pleasure of such companionship, I should be very glad to contribute, as provoker of discussion, short talks on particular plays or playwrights.

May I ask, then, to meet Friday afternoon at four, in Rogers 11, all fellows who would enjoy some such informal Playgoers' gathering? I should like in a half hour or so to become pleasantly acquainted with these men, to hear any ideas they have about such a fellowship and to start things going by a talk on the English playwright, Mr. Henry Arthur Jones, especially his two comedies now on the Boston stage, "Rebellious Susan" and "The Middleman."

In appealing thus to every Institute man interested in plays, I would assure him that as officially, I try to help him in his work. I should feel personally, in no small way, privileged to share with him his pleasures.

H. L. SEAVER.
