COMMUNICATION.

the underlying Technology spirit which were we together more, would be much more manifest.

Most of us will admit that a college situated in a small, quiet, country town is much more pleasant and appealing than one in the heart of a crowded, noisy city. But we know that in the former college there is bound to be a great deal of college life. The years that a man spends at Yale or Dartmouth are the happiest of his life, but there is something harmful about it. For college and dormitory life cannot go hand in hand with concentrated hard work. And it is only by concentrated hard work that things worth while are accomplished. It is mainly by having us work hard that Technology holds its prestige. And now another interesting question rises. Would we be willing to sacrifice this well earned prestige for the sake of getting more enjoyment out of our college career?
