Library Work A Field For College Graduate

Christopher Morley recently said in the New York Evening Post:

"It has been our observation that librarians are among the nicest people in the world. We do not want to draw any hard and fast lines, or wound any feelings, therefore we will not be positively dogmatic on the subject, or assert that librarians as a class have been more genial to us than doughnut sellers, managing editors, smoking-room stewards at sea, elevator boys or the people who give away free seats for the theatres. But librarians have delightful, demure and public-spirited virtues. We have never been inside a public library without wishing that we were half as patient, public-spirited, efficacious or good-looking as they are."

This is perhaps unduly complimentary, but undoubtedly library work is of a kind that inspires enthusiasm and joy in the thing done. It brings to the librarian contact with the thinking and reading part of the community and it brings through books the possibility of association with the great and most active minds of the past and present. In a word, to those who have under consideration the selection of a life vocation, the library offers a tremendous opportunity for service and the pleasure which comes to those rendering such service.

Great Demand for Librarians
 Library schools, of which there are about twenty in various parts of the United States, each year graduate several hundred students, who generally are placed in positions before graduation at salaries ranging from $1000 to $1500, depending on ability and previous experience.

The demand for trained librarians has been greater than the supply for many years and the condition is unchanged at the present time; in fact, many positions would command better salaries if trained librarians were available to fill them.

Field for Work Large
 One of the directions in which library work is expanding most rapidly at the present time is that of the High School. Educators are coming to realize that the efficient school library is essential in every High School. High School librarians are coming to rank with High School instructors and receive the same salaries. The demand for librarians in business establishments also is increasing rapidly.

HAYES WINS ANNUAL CAMP ATHLETIC EVENT

banked with golden rod, pond lilies and green cedar, emblems of the camp life the lad had lived for the month preceding his death, simple tokens of the esteem in which his fellow-students held him.

Send Body to Haverhill

At 5:30 o'clock the body was borne from the Hall down to the wharf through a double line of students who stood with heads bowed as the casket containing the remains of young McAuliffe was carried to the motor boat to be taken across the lake to the station and thence forwarded to his late home at Haverhill.

Professor J. B. Babcock, who has charge of the railway course at camp arrived in time to start the fieldwork with the students. Professor Babcock came here direct from Washington, D. C., where he had been associated with the U. S. Railroad Administration since the close of school in June.

Mr. Eberhard of the descriptive geometry department at the Institute had been in charge of the railway department here until Professor Babcock came. He went to Vermont with Professor Howard and the students in Course III, Mining Engineering.

"Benchmark" Ready Soon
 Work on the Benchmark, the initial edition of what is hoped will be a camp annual, holding the same relation to camp that Technique does to Technology, is progressing rapidly. All the material is in the hands of the printer and it is expected that the book will be ready for distribution in a week or so.

J. C. Patty '22, editor-in-chief of the book, and his staff have worked untiringly to make the first Benchmark a complete success. They have gathered together some excellent material and have apparently mastered the difficulties that beset them at first in the removal of the camp from adequate printing facilities.

Minstrel Show Huge Success

The camp minstrel show was given Saturday in East Machias Town Hall. John L. Liecty '22 was interlocutor and the ends were L. B. Davis '21, Sam Guthman '22, L. B. Laird '22, and J. H. Dodge '21. The show scored a tremendous hit with townspeople and campers alike and the hall was packed to capacity.

Mrs. Fox was bragging one day about the large number of her cubs.

"How many cubs do you bring into the world at one time?" she asked the LIONESS.

"Only ONE," replied the Lioness—"but it's a LION."
