THE LOUNGER

posing sight to see three thousand youths, including our fifty odd co-eds in one-piece bathing suits, churning up the waters of the good old Atlantic in an aqueous race for the desired "T." Neptune himself could furnish them donkeys on which to ride home. And the great Powers would have to call an international conference to establish traffic cops out in the middle of the ocean to prevent inter-class collisions.

Talk about your trans-Atlantic air flights. This has that beaten a mile. It'll be a non-stop flight, too. Or else it'll be the final stop for those attempting the feat.

And if the balloon is blown inland it'll be a good time. But why don't the Seniors make it a bit difficult or ridiculous while they are at it. The Lounger suggests they send up the balloon some time after midnight. Not even a light would be necessary. They could tie a piece of garlic on with the "T" and let some of our friends in the Cosmopolitan Club chase after it.

There is just one great possibility to this idea of Senior ballooning (the last part of the word seems to fit well at least). Since the Seniors are so anxious to fly, and since we'll all miss them so much, why not send up the whole recent Institute Committee and let them blow away peacefully and unobserved, as they didn't want to be?

Or at least give our old friend Investigator a chance to display his talents vamping buzzards and albatrosses, or showing off his sylph-like features to the zephyrus cherubim who haunt the skies above. Here is his chance to make Jack of the Bean Stalk look like a fraud. The Lounger has heard of Tech men doing everything from stitching sausages to running the government. Here is the opportunity for the Investigator to find out for us what Heaven is like. The Lounger wishes him god-speed. He concludes his dissertation gloating over the fact that angels are always drawn or pictured without heads.

How About It, Mr. Technology Man?

By H. O. Tappan '23

LAST YEAR'S CONFERENCE

"My name's Black, of Syracuse."
"Mine's Smith, of Tech—Boston Tech—M. I. T., you know."

Thus two men meet at Silver Bay. And No. 1 asks how many No. 2 has in his delegation. And three years ago No. 2 answered, "10". And two years ago he also answered "10". But a year ago he stuck out his chest and said, "51".

Now up in the northeast corner of old New York State, there are some mountains called the Adirondacks. And nestled down between some of those mountains is a body of water called Lake George. And three-quarters up the west side of this lake, in the district known as the "Switzerland of America," is the spot called Silver Bay. And here is held annually that Conference promoted by the Student Department of the Y. M. C. A., which is attended by some 800 delegates representing 80 different institutions in New England and the Middle Atlantic States. Yes, last year Yale had 60, Tech 51, Harvard 37, Dartmouth 17, etc., etc. For 36 consecutive years students have been attending this great intercollegiate gathering.

"What's the big idea?" asks the guy in the Main Lobby.

"Any girls to look into my eyes?" queries the queer boy in Walker.

The "big idea" is that for eight days many men mingle in morning meetings, afternoon athletics and evening entertainments with hats off, coats off and sleeves rolled up. The platform speakers are those most desired by colleges: Raymond Robins, Robert Speer, Henry Sloane Coffin and Harry Emerson Fosdick. The forums discuss international problems and Christian solutions, homeland problems, college problems, etc. The athletics include the baseball series, the tennis tournament, the track meet, the swimming meet, to say nothing of the boating, fishing and hiking. The "Stunt Night" with its queer costumes, college yells and college songs, added to the general sociability, give to the whole occasion a uniqueness which is only collegiate. And as to the girls—some wait on the table and several college dramatic associations produce "peaches" on "Stunt Night."

'Tis said that a college man's course is not complete without his attending at least once one of these big student conferences held in June every year in different parts of the United States. Is this year our year? It is for us to say. To say whether or not we will benefit ourselves and whether or not we will place Technology where she belongs—in the foremost rank.
